

ABSTRACT

A mass flowmeter system for use in steam reformation of hydrocarbons includes a Coriolis flowmeter in a hydrocarbon feedstock line. The feedstock carbon content is estimated by close approximation, which facilitates selective control operations governing the relative amounts of steam and hydrocarbon materials as they feed a hydrogen processing unit. The relative amounts of steam and hydrocarbon feedstock are adjusted on the basis of real time measurements.